

Prof John Upham

University of Queensland/Princess Alexandra Hospital. John Upham is a respiratory physician and clinical scientist with research interests in the immune basis of asthma and COPD. His research focuses on the importance of dendritic cells in allergy disease, new approaches to blocking allergic inflammation using bacterial products, documenting the development of immunity during childhood and host defence against respiratory viral and bacterial infections. He has published over 110 peer-reviewed journal articles and book chapters.